ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

Preparatory drawing for Caprice no. 46. Correction.

This sketch differs ostensibly from the print. In it, the characters have more caricatured faces and Goya had not yet thought of the flying figures or the two figures in the background on the left-hand side. In addition, the head of the central figure has a more animalistic appearance, and the one in front of him in the engraving, dressed in a coat and wig, is more deformed in the drawing and his clothing is barely distinguishable. The hands of the robed man in the foreground are faintly suggested and seem to have disappeared into the folds of his habit, as is the book he is reading in the print. His face, as well as that of the figure accompanying him, is not as deformed and aged as in the print.
